

£1m charity cash for group linked to Iran

From the Telegraph. The Islamic Human Rights Commission is the outfit that has organised the annual Al quds day abomination in London for the last decade or so. That is definitely not a charitable purpose.

A human rights organisation supported by Jeremy Corbyn has received more than £1 million in charity cash despite being run by self-declared Islamist revolutionaries closely aligned to Iran who say that the West is “the enemy” and Britain a “Stasi state”.

Leaders of the Saied Reza Ameli, the Tehran-based secretary of one of Iran’s leading policy-making bodies, the Supreme Council of the Cultural Revolution;

- Arzu Merali, the research director, who was introduced at a 2014 conference as “a revolutionary” and a “powerful voice of Islamic-inspired resistance to the status quo”. She said then: “We know who the enemy is. It’s the West, Nato countries [and] . . . the white supremacist or liberal structure we’re all suffering at the hands of.” She and Mr Shadjareh wrote a 2008 paper in which they told of their “radicalisation” as Islamists and said: “We are all Hezbollah.”
- Nazim Ali, who at a Zionists who give money to the Tory party to kill people in high-rise blocks”.

A Labour spokesman said Mr Corbyn was “a long-standing campaigner for human rights across the world, including in Iran” ... The Times asked whether he continued to hold a high opinion of IHRC but has had no reply. As Labour leader, he attended a 2016 book launch hosted by the group. He has also received almost £20,000 for appearances on Press TV.

An IHRC spokesman said: “Trying to align us to any country based on the ethnicity of any of our staff, directors or volunteers is essentially a racist enterprise.”

The Charity Commission recently concluded a two-year investigation into the relationship between IHRC and its trust but did not order any changes.