

A Musical Interlude: Kabarett Program (Trude Berliner, Siegfried Arno)

Watch, and listen, here.

How quickly Germany was transformed. With what alacrity, scarcely packing their bags, did Siegfried Arno and Trude Berliner and so many others have to leave. Others stayed – many could not get out – and were murdered. Oh, it could happen again, with other ferocities coming to dominate. Strange, isn't it, that none of those German leaders who denounce those who are worried about the islamisation of Europe as "far-right" are able to see what should be obvious: the connection between that future conceivable islamisation, and the second, and this time final, destruction, of European Jewry. But then one can console oneself with the thought of all the benefits, all those rich contributions to art, science, literature, that those Muslims will make, while those Jews made so few, and will hardly be missed.
