An End to Counting

by James Como (May 2021)

The Man in the Carriage II, Walter Gramatté, 1920

Is there any little thing we don't count? Money, weight, nuts in a bowl? Well: birthdays included I am concluded and far beyond vexed.

You see, I've been an actor dressing the parts, but not undressing for the next, instead fitting that new costume over the old. Too many to guess.

So, now, I disrobe. How old, how many outfits, how much acting? Now, uncostumed—you know what's next— There is no one to unfold.

A shadow disappearing at noon or midnight (no matter), I no longer count.
