

Two Poems

by Lois Marie Harrod (August 2020)

Bees, Graham Sutherland, 1963

The Latest Buzz

Bumble

bees

do not have ears

and no one knows

if they hear.

Nor do

the Bombus

really dance—

though

after forage

they buzz to nest

and fuzz laps

around their fellows

before

resuming field.

Some think

this drone and prance

be

communication,
and surmise
the humming hymn
gives spin
to all the noise
at tracked
and trackless
competitions.

Where the Womb, Now Worry

Oh, my darling, I am emptied like an orange peel of its orange, like an apple skin swirling air, thin or thick, often humid, heavy, a potato peel coiling a density where its body has been, oh the grit of husk, the little eyes warting the wrap, nasty and larval, sending up stem.

«Previous Article Table of Contents Next Article»

Lois Marie Harrod's 17th collection Woman was published by Blue Lyra in February 2020. Her Nightmares of the Minor Poet appeared in June 2016 from Five Oaks; her chapbook And She Took the Heart appeared in January 2016; Fragments from the Biography of Nemesis (Cherry Grove Press) and the chapbook How Marlene Mae Longs for Truth (Dancing Girl Press) appeared in 2013. A Dodge poet, she is published in literary journals and online ezines from American Poetry Review to Zone 3. She teaches at the Evergreen Forum in Princeton and at The College of New Jersey. Links to her online work