

Beware of Pundits Who Would have Fed Kurds to the Islamists

by Robert Sklaroff and Sherkoh Abbas

Recalling sequels of the movie Jaws, it remains unsafe for Kurds to wade freely into the polluted waters of Middle East politics despite the recommitment by President Donald Trump to maintain a military presence in Syria and the subsequent defeat of the Islamic State.

What was unmasked in the interim must unnerve perceptive readers, for neo-isolationists abound in both political parties. Ironically, while Kurds suffered in purgatory, this chronology unmasked defeatist pundits who must now be outed lest they undermine an unabashedly fruitful process.

Trump Disrupts Precipitously

Kurds felt quick withdrawal had been conveyed to “America’s partners in northeast Syria, namely the Kurdish People’s Protection Units (YPG),” for this portended resignation of Javad Zarif as Foreign Minister following the visit to Tehran of President Bashar-al-Assad, Zarif’s influence was apparently strengthened. After Trump signed legislation reclaim land within a year without military pressure; a pullout would carry csecurity and controlling the Syrian-Turkish border (“Rojava”) matters for Israel .

“History,” which will forever recall that Jimmy Carter lost Iran, was poised to suggest “Trump” as the answer to the question, “Who lost Syria?”

Willy Loman: “Attention must be paid” to the Kurds.

Trump-supporters searched for a silver-lining without stretching credulity and gleeful never-Trumpers from across the political spectrum trashed his substance and/or style.

We chimed-in, discussing why Kurdistan is a linchpin to America’s Middle East Policy; how any Syrian withdrawal must protect Syrian withdrawal must protect the Kurds; how to resolve the Turkish-Kurdish standoff, and how to apply a flexible model for a reconstructed Middle East. Indeed, that latter piece presaged Trump’s historic decision to acknowledge intent to redraw Syria’s borders, for recognizing Israeli control over the Golan Heights for more than a half-century segues into recognizing Kurdish roots in their homeland for three millennia.

Also prescient was introduction of two Senate Amendments, one that generically declared the Islamic State and Al-Qaeda remained remain. This may explain why Israeli Prime Minister Netanyahu has frequently visited Russian President Putin, for reminding him of Islamist Chechens threatening domestic tranquility may forestall his providing opportunistic military backing to their colleagues abroad.

Conflicted Republicans Agonize

Right-wingers advanced a philosophical non-interference posture, among them the Reason Foundation, the Cato Institute and The Federalistliberation, overlooking the potential for empowered Kurds to thwart Iranian expansion via this puppet-state.

Neo-conservatives joined the blame-game, trumpeting the view that the 2012 "Authorization for Use of Military Force Against Iraq" legislation passed in the wake of 9-11 has been stretched to encompass Syria.

The claim that America should not prioritize dealings with substate actors such as Kurdistan was conveyed in essays (and confirmed orally) by former presidential antiterrorism adviser and current radio personality Sebastian Gorka, who twice claimed conversationally (in 2017 and 2018) that it remains premature to side with the Kurds. Evolving perhaps, he has subsequently observed that the Trump-Doctrine of Strategic-Realism mandates that America will reliably help friends (particularly Sunnis) who do not need nation-building, and he has more recently recognized that the "War Against ISIS isn't over yet."

He need not fret. Trump covets coalitions whose members don't passively depend upon America and would presumably support the Kurds' unique potency and reliability against Islamists. This circumstance contrasts with America's misappropriation (assisted by Turkey) to train the Free Syrian Army, most of whom are now Islamists who implement Erdoğan's desire to fight Kurds.

Sebastian Gorka, who is no longer a FoxNews stymied America's pro-Israel groups and individuals, observing that well-referenced pro-Trump crusaders such as Pamela Geller withheld critique. This dynamic was dramatized by customarily-brilliant Caroline Glick, who conjured a tortured set of “positive” facets of withdrawal, forgetting that all she had posited could be achieved without the withdrawal. {It is possible that Glick was quietly self-aware of her lapse in critical thinking ability when attempting to find any justification for the Syrian withdrawal; this may, in turn, have prompted her to seek a new career as a politician with Israel’s “New Right” party, thereby having to maintain responsibility solely to “self” when engaging in punditry.}

Countering such concerns and consistent with our plan is Dr. Walid Phares’ introduced on Al Arabiya that would separate Turkey and Syria by empowering a third-party multinational force – perhaps under the United Nations (Chapter 7) – to regulate a security zone (including parts of both countries), thereby supplanting any Turkish Erdo?an.

A Reasonable Battle-Plan

Erdo?an wants to Joel Pollak and storied organizations such as the Sen. Mitt Romney \(Ut, R.\) stressed the need to protect allies including the Kurds and were highly critical of Trump’s potential withdrawal.

They advocate reducing the influence of groups linked to Assad/PKK and increasing the influence of groups aspiring to implement a Western-style representative-democracy. Just as occurred in Iraqi Kurdistan in September 2017, Syrian Kurds must be empowered to hold an election that will determine their fate; groups such as Kurdnas should be included in this process.

Tension has not appreciably abated.

Just as politicians and politicians are finally being holding at least 2000 suspected Islamist terrorists and protecting minorities such as the without putting more boots on the ground.
