

Chelsea fans march: No Surrender to Islamic Terror

To London to observe a march against Islamic terrorism, organised at short notice by supporters of Chelsea FC, the West London premier club. Fans of all other clubs were welcome. I missed the second of the Football Lads Alliance marches through central London two weeks ago as I was abroad. However then, thousands, of mostly men, marched in near silence through London without incident. I am told that the ranks included quite a few women, black football supporters, Sikhs and prominently, Military Veterans groups.

However, despite their efforts, game and well-meant I believe, to try and convince the media and those on the left that they are inclusive, non-racist, as those of us who have studied this for many years know, this is futile. To this end they withdrew the invitation to speak from a woman Stand Up To Racism (SUTR) expressed disapproval of. On the day they asked Tommy Robinson who was covering the march for Rebel Media (his condemnation since the first FLA march in June. The UAF posted this on their facebook page after the event. Except, there was no counter demonstration (and from the wording I don't think they were actually claiming there was one) and the march did not go past the East London Mosque. It went south, away from Whitechapel, across Tower Bridge to City Hall.

The image shows a screenshot of the Facebook page for 'Unite Against Fascism' (@UAFpage). The page header includes navigation options: Like, Follow, Share, and a menu icon. The profile picture is a logo with the text 'unite against fascism'. The main content area displays two posts. The top post is a status update from the page: 'Solidarity with anti fascists in East London & all at East London Mosque and shame on those who facilitated a tiny Nazi march past east London Mosque East London UAF'. It has 13 likes and 1 share. The bottom post is a post from the page, 2 hours old, with the text: 'Shame on those in authority who allowed fascists crawl past East London Mosque, solidarity with anti fascists who tried opposing them. @uaf'. It has 9 likes. The left sidebar shows navigation options: Home, About, Photos, Invite Your Friends!, Videos, Notes, and Events.

They couldn't even spare a comrade from their conference in Euston today to observe and get their facts right about the route of the march. Oh dear! It wasn't a secret either.

This was the scene outside the East London Mosque, 10 minutes after the march moved off towards City Hall. Some police vans, no police officers, and worshippers leaving the men's entrance totally unconcerned.

Altab Ali park was quiet, all I could see was Mums with prams. I couldn't be in two places at once, so while I was in Whitechapel looking for the non-existent counter-demonstration by the brave comrades of the UAF/SWP/SUTP #jumponthebandwagon/ a trusted friend was at Aldgate East to follow the march. He also took photographs

This is them being escorted by the Tower of London towards Tower Bridge. The turnout was probably 150 men.

And this is the speeches which I am told were succinct but to the point, on the matter of the organised Islamic rape/prostitution grooming gangs. For those who don't know London City Hall is the round asymmetrical building at the left edge.

Then the march dispersed to go about the rest of the days business.

There will be more of this; different groups in their own towns and cities. Public awareness is high and rising further. Be warned.
