In a major intelligence breakthrough, agencies have uncovered critical details about Jaish-e-Mohammed’s (JeM) top commander,

Dr Shaheen, who operated under the code name 'Madam Surgeon.' Shaheen, known for her recruitment operations, was referred to by this alias among her close associates and fellow Jaish operatives involved in the terror outfit's radicalisation activities across India.

Sources reveal that Dr Shaheen was orchestrating a covert radicalisation initiative called 'Operation Hamdard,' designed to lure young Muslim women and girls into extremism under the guise of sympathy and empowerment. The operation used a psychological manipulation model that targeted vulnerable sections of society.

Investigative agencies have decoded several encrypted conversations in which 'Team D,' allegedly led by Dr Shaheen, was actively planning recruitment and logistics for Jaish-e-Mohammed. Members of Team D were mostly medical professionals who used coded terms in their communication to disguise their operations.

The Uttar Pradesh Anti-Terrorism Squad (ATS) has now placed Team D under close surveillance. The agency has been examining the financial transactions of Dr Parvez and Dr Arif, both alleged associates of Dr Shaheen.

The Delhi Police, while investigating the Red Fort blast case that claimed 12 lives, have gathered CCTV footage from nearly 50 locations across the city, tracing the detailed movements of the key accused, Dr Umar . . . first spotted in the South-East District . . . returned to the Central District, where he was seen visiting a mosque. His last known stop was the Red Fort parking area in the North District.

In a parallel development, agencies probing the case recovered diaries belonging to Dr Umar and co-accused Dr Muzammil. The entries, dated between November 8 and 12, reference detailed planning leading up to the blast. The diaries also contain the names of around 25 individuals, most reportedly from Jammu and Kashmir and Faridabad, suggesting the existence of a coordinated terror network.
