

Did The Police Bullets Kill The Hostages At The Hyper Cacher?

I'm wondering. I have that feeling. Something isn't right about the coverage. And what about the girl – Hayat Boumedienne – who managed to escape, despite that enormous police cordon. How did that happen?

And Amedy Coulibaly, who comes from a family of ten children, who became a drug dealer, who went to prison, who never gave any sign, in any way, that he was or could be anything but the petty criminal he turned out to be, met in prison – tiens! – Muslims happy to share their faith with him. This prison Da'wa, that is allowed to go all over the Western world, which of course is most successful among the most primitive and the most dangerous, and both justifies their aggression and criminal behavior, which is now interpreted as being justified because the victims are Infidels, and have it – robbery, rape, murder – coming to them, won't stop until the governments of the West figure out ways to isolate the Muslims, and not allow them to intermingle in prisons with the non-Muslims with whom they've been having such success.
