

Felix Coe Retires

by Hugh Fitzgerald

Felix Coe was until very recently an associate professor of biology at the University of Connecticut. He is a convert to Islam who had Campus Reform, "UConn promptly resolved the issue in a manner that respects the rights of all involved, and affirms the University's values of civility and inclusivity. Regarding this instance, the sign that had directed guests to precede their conversations with a specific Arabic phrase was immediately removed at the University's direction," a university spokesperson stated.

And that was not the end of the matter. Sometime after December 2017, we now learn, Felix Coe "retired." Was he forced to retire from the University of Connecticut, given the outrageousness of his behavior? Or did he retire because he didn't like being told what he could and could not require of visitors? It hardly matters. He is gone. The administration, the faculty, and above all the students, are free from his bullying. The students and parents who helped draw attention to his behavior will be models for activist students, and their parents, on other campuses. And Muslim faculty, who might have emulated him, will now learn from the example of former associate professor, Felix Coe, now suddenly retired, that there are limits to what the Infidels will endure.
