

How The Guardian Covers Israeli Searches for Terrorists in the West Bank

by Hugh Fitzgerald

Israeli soldiers search for Palestinian terrorists, and their weapons, in the West Bank. It's a perfectly understandable response to attacks on Israeli civilian and soldiers, to find those responsible for past attacks and to prevent future ones, but The Guardian managed, in its inimitable anti-Israel way, to describe these searches as something sinister, a deliberate attempt by Israeli stormtroopers to intimidate and harass innocent Palestinians. A report on The Guardian's tendentious piece on IDF anti-terrorist raids is Jihad Watch.
