Iran backers met more than 30 times with senior Obama admin official

Adam Kredo writes in the Seyed Mousavian, a former Iranian diplomat and head of its national security council, was hosted at the White House 33 times, according to recently updated visitor logs.

Sources familiar with the nature of the meetings told the Washington Free Beacon that both Parsi and Mousavian helped the White House craft its pro-Iran messaging and talking points that helped lead to the nuclear agreement with Iran. These efforts were part of a larger pro-Iran deal "echo chamber" led by senior Obama administration officials who were tasked with misleading Congress about the nature of the deal.
