

Iran, Humiliated By Natanz, Claims It Hit 'Mossad' Site In Iraq

by Hugh Fitzgerald

The Iranians are smarting from the latest Mossad attack, which destroyed much of its new centrifuge plant, built 50 meters underground, at Natanz. There have been dire threats from Iran about taking its revenge on Israel. And the Iranians were quick to announce that they had launched an attack on what they describe as a Mossad intelligence center in Kurdish Iraq, and caused many casualties among its "Israeli forces." It was an attempt to persuade both its own people, and the rest of the world, that Iran was able to strike back at once and inflict significant damage on Israel.

The report on the supposed attack is here: "Iranian media spreads report of attack on alleged Mossad center in Iraq," by Tzvi Joffre,
