

Iran Parliament Rejects Nuke Deal, Passes Amended Version

Jordan Schachtel writes in reported that the majilis approved the actual text of the JCPOA, according to experts.

New York Post columnist Amir Taheri has MEMRI), a regional watchdog organization, has confirmed that Iran did not pass the deal agreed upon in July. They instead voted to pass the amended version by a vote of 161-59.

Iranian lawmakers tried to unilaterally amend the deal to strip the United States' ability to "snapback" sanctions should the Tehran regime cheat the agreement. They also replaced the language to ensure that the deal will "cancel" sanctions forever, instead of "suspending" them, MEMRI reported.

The Middle East monitoring group added that the decision to amend the deal unilaterally came at the behest of Iran's dictator, Ali Khamenei, who on September 3 promised not to honor the agreement with Obama.

Moreover, the American Enterprise Institute's Iran Tracker site noted that Iran considered its unilateral amendments to the deal as four "minor changes."

Separately, as Iranian regime parliamentarians were voting on their own version of the nuke deal, its military was assets.

Tehran's military is now deeply involved in the ongoing civil war in Syria, with some provide aid and arms to terror groups Hamas and Hezbollah, and has assisted the Houthi insurgents in Yemen. Multiple Gulf states have also accused the regime of backing terrorist movements that seek to overthrow their governments.