ISIS has claimed responsibility for London Bridge terror attack which killed the two members of the public, and left another three injured on Friday afternoon, through its Amaq news agency reports.

The terror organisation's news agency has now said Khan, 28, was one of its fighters.

However, the group did not provide any evidence.

It added that the attack was made in response to Islamic State calls to target countries that have been part of a coalition fighting the jihadist group.
