

ISIS Terrorist Camps identified on Texas New Mexico Border

Reliable federal Mexican and US counter-terrorism intelligence sources have identified two ISIS training camps located along the Texas and New Mexico borders with Mexico. One is located within 8 miles of metro El Paso west of the Mexico border city of Juarez. The other is located further West just across the border within relative easy access to the New Mexican communities of Columbus and Deming. Combined Mexican federal police and US counter-terrorism agents have found evidence of activity by Muslim adherents at both locations, as well as plans for terrorist attacks.

The news reminds us of Columbus, New Mexico, which was Pancho Villa Mexican Expedition by Gen. John "Black Jack" Pershing, who was determined to track down Villa and destroy as many of his forces as possible/

Could we be on the cusp of a similar attack by ISIS forces in cahoots with Mexican Drug cartels and 'coyotes'? Is ISIS preparing for facilitated border crossings by Islamic terrorists? Would President Obama have the same resolve as President Wilson did, to order joint US-Mexican operations to clear a buffer zone below the US-Mexican border, ridding the area of both ISIS and drug cartel facilitators?

Washington cross-talk notwithstanding, we have been alerting our readers over the last few months that ISIS has targeted the US and already has agents in country. They are escorted by 'coyotes' as 'special customers' for as much as $50,000 per head. The probability that once here they will attempt to attack American targets is very high.

Now that this latest information is out, what will the Obama White House do to protect our vulnerable southern border? Like the 1916 Punitive Expedition against Pancho Villa, any effort might involve cooperative cross border actions.

It looks like White House spokesperson Josh Earnest will have to take back his claim of last August that there is "no evidence" that ISIS is plotting terror events against the US.
