

Islamic hackers pull down English Defence League website on eve of controversial 'mega-mosque' protest

From the English Defence League website after labelling it an "anti-Muslim hate organisation". A group called the Izzah Hackers hobbled the EDL page as part of a campaign called #OpIzzah aimed at stopping "Islamophobic" groups from spreading their messages online.

The attack comes the day before a protest against the proposed construction of a mosque in Dudley, a town near Wolverhampton.

Thugs will march through Dudley and demand the council veto the building of a "mega mosque", which was given the go-ahead last year following a seven year planning battle. We must remember that the Mirror, for many years a sound working class newspaper has abandoned its core readership with gusto and now funds the anti-English organisation Hope not Hate (or Dopes without Soap, as some call them). They have not got the situation regarding here

Up to 2,000 English Defence League members were arriving in Dudley today as the town prepared for its third rally in five years.

Speeches are in progress, plus photographs and some video showing the turnout.
