

Islamic State Manifesto Details Paris Attacks, Describes Expansion Plans

John Rossomando writes in “Black Flags From the Islamic State.” Originally 200 operatives in undisclosed locations who worked for two months, the ebook claims. Some lived near the Belgian-German border and in other European countries. Salah AbdelSalam, the surviving attacker, escaped by using a route through Eastern Europe and Turkey to Islamic State territory that was established in advance in case the plot was thwarted, “Black Flags From the Islamic State” says.

“This has shocked the Intelligence agencies and many European countries are thinking of closing their borders so future Mujahideen cannot escape to neighbouring countries easily. (The praise is for Allah: While the Islamic State is smashing borders in the Muslim world, the European Union is crumbling and returning to the Darker Ages of enforced borders.),” “Black Flags From the Islamic State” divided the tasks needed for the operation, the ISIS booklet claims. One cell planned the attacks, recruited operatives, directed and coordinated members of the operation and maintained communications between the various cells. Another cell armed the attackers with their AK-47s, suicide belts and other explosives, and kept watch on French security forces’ movements. This second group picked up evade detection by intelligence services. He communicated in person, telling the attackers not to speak with others.

“Black Flags From the Islamic State” recruited Bilal Hafdi, a French citizen previously thought to have been killed fighting in Syria, to do the suicide bombing at the Stade de France. Abaaoud also followed rules recommended in the Islamic State manual “Safety and Security guidelines for Lone Wolf Mujahideen” and says.

It notes that boasts. Jihadis are a policy also used during the Clinton administration – which curtailed the ability to get needed information. President Obama’s election and the end of the surge in Iraq marked a turning point for the worse in the West’s ability to gather intelligence, the source says.

Strong human-intelligence gathering is vital, Shaikh says.

Islamic State jihadis says. ISIS hopes overreactions by police, security services and right-wing groups will help alienate Muslim populations and make them ripe for waging jihad in Europe.

“The reality is that so long as Mujahideen in Europe keep their secret Cells secure from outsiders, and avoid electronic communications for planning attacks, they are likely to succeed in their attacks because weapons are flowing more freely across Europe due to an increase in organized gangs and less police (due to a poorer economy:),” the “Black Flags” ebook employed former members of Saddam Hussein’s intelligence service – some of whom hold says.

During the Iraq conflict, the Islamic State, then known as Al-Qaida in Iraq, established cells of five fighters or fewer to do missions. One person would attack, another would help the attacker escape, while others would provide a hiding place or dispose of weapons.

“Their strength lies in their secrecy and small number because less numbers = less people to spill secrets of the small group. Cells run independently, they find their own funding (money), they plan their own attacks, and perform their own hiding places,” “Black Flags From the Islamic State” says.

It provides an says to “stay off the phone,” avoid using ATMs, use cars that don’t belong to them and travel at night.

ISIS Plans for Global Jihad

“The aim of [ISIS leader] Abu Bakr [Al-Baghdadi] was to use the Iraqi Jihad model in Syria, and once it worked there, to export this model across the entire Muslim world for newer Jihads,” “Black Flags From The Islamic State” arrival of the Mahdi, Islam’s “Clash of Civilizations” is inevitable and claims that the rise of neo-fascist groups in Europe, Donald Trump and Pamela Geller in the U.S. will help them achieve their goal of radicalizing Western Muslims.

“Muslims are realizing day by day that there is no honor except in Jihad, and there is only humiliation in sitting and talking about ‘peace,’ but they get no peace unless they fought to defend themselves,” “Black Flags From the Islamic State” start with lone-wolf attacks to inspire others to join the cause. As more people join the cause, the jihad will insurgent army.

“Ones the insurgency is in full action, the Organisation leader can tell his subleaders to organize full scale attacks,” “Black Flags From the Islamic State” “Mujahid cubs” – children the group has indoctrinated with jihadist ideology that it hopes will arise even if the West succeeds in ousting them from the territory ISIS controls.

“Jihad will not be dependent upon Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi’s inner circle. Infact (sic), killing the leadership will be even worse for the Americans because the newer generation will be even more brutal because everytime America tries to destroy an Islamic armed group – a even more violent group is created,” “Black Flags From The Islamic State” suggests that killing Baghdadi would herald the arrival of the Mahdi, who will come at the end of the world, a clear suggestion that the group may be trying to keep its fighters and followers motivated.

If they lose, ISIS