

Ivan Rioufol: The Maddened Progressives Merely Increase Support For The National Front

Note particularly the statement by Cambadelis of the Socialist Party: “Les socialistes sont pour le traitement républicain de l’immigration, c’est-à-dire que l’on peut s’installer où on veut, quand on veut.” Really? That’s it? Immigrants can go where they want, when they want? That’s the principle that should be applied to France, and to Western Europe, as the hordes arrive from North Africa and the Middle East? These immigrants cannot integrate. Many are illiterate even in their own languages. They come from primitive places, many of them Muslims, carrying with them the permanent enmity that Islam inculcates. Once in Europe, they become a fantastically expensive and disruptive force, destroying whatever tranquillity and sense of nationhood that may be left in the countries left open, through a diseased tolerance, to their enemies.

Neither France nor any other country should be expected to admit such immigrants – or indeed any immigrants – into its midst. France is a country with a long history, and a people who made France and in turn were made by it. They do not have any obligation to make their own lives, and that of their children, more difficult, expensive, dangerous.
