Latvia an Islamic state in 50 years, boast Muslim community leaders, 'Integration will not take place'

From Morning Independent newspaper, the chairman and head spokesman of the Islamic Cultural Centre, better known as Riga Mosque, said while they both had three children with their wives each "we are working to have more" in an effort to colonise the country faster.

Asked "what are the chances that Latvia will become part of the Caliphate?" white convert and centre spokesman Ahmed Robert Klimovi?s said he hoped it would. On the future of the predominantly Christian nation of just two million people – less than the population of Britain's second city – Mr. Klimovi?s said: "Latvians understand that in 50 years this will be an Islamic State. This is because Islamic children will be in the majority".

"Islam is the best way to conquer the world in the form of peace", he said

Centre chairman Abu Hamza Umar John Lucino mocked Latvians who objected to the seemingly unstoppable tide of demographics threatening to sweep the traditions of the country away on the basis of Latvia being predominantly a Christian nation.

He asked: "We often hear this is a Christian country. Although if we look at history, what do you take as your starting point? Which year? Which century? 800 years ago, Christianity was the one moving in here, it was not the religion of the local people. Now Islam is entering. Except unlike Christianity, Islam is not spreading with violence" Who is he trying to kid?

Mr. Klimovi?s replied: "It is absolutely clear that this merger will not take place. Our cultures are completely different. If people come here who practice Islam, God will prevent them from integrating into your society, where everything is permissible. This is the largest nursing home for the elderly, with the highest suicide rate in Europe. God will protect them from having to make the choice between Islam and the culture of Coca-Cola!".

"... I am categorically against integration. Because what does it mean to integrate? Islam will later turn on those who say this is right. But we know it is no good".

At least one Latvian travelled to the Islamic State in 2014 to fight jihad, while the Latvian

Public Broadcasting Corporation reports another two Muslims were under investigation this year for travelling to Syria. The Latvian security services expressed concern that returning fighters could post a terror threat to the country, or would work to radicalise other Muslims.
