

Lies, Damned Lies, And Fake News

You'll all remember the anti-free speech story from a week or so ago.

The one about the nasty, horrible, ill-mannered louts and sluttish females all of whom support President Trump and the Free Tommy Robinson campaign who surrounded and abused a London bus driver simply because she was a Mohammedan wearing a hijab. She smiled calmly at them and carried on.

Did you believe it?

If you did, then you shouldn't have.

Because it's a completely made up story.

It's fake news. It's lies. It's a fairy story.

Don't believe me?

Not to mention all the broadcasters that also retailed this staggering lie.

That's the standard that British so-called newspapers have sunk to, along with most of the rest of the main-stream media. They tell lies deliberately and with malicious aforethought. They publish and disseminate absolute lies. Never mind the phrase 'fake news', absolute lies is a much more accurate description of most of what they print or broadcast.

This one story shows exactly how scandalously, irresponsibly and nastily they behave. Make no mistake, most of the people who concoct the stories that end up being printed or broadcast are nasty, and a substantial number of them could be called wicked – if not downright evil.

The purveyors of lies and fake news deserve only one fate. Carry on Mr. President, call them out on every occasion they transgress.

Britain needs “a Donald”, but there’s no one on this side of the pond who even comes close – regrettably!
