

Pro-Palestinian violence on the streets of London

There was another pro-Palestinian demonstration in Whitehall opposite Downing Street tonight. As rockets rain down on Israel from Gaza sent by the poor Palestinians, other Palestinians, Arabs and their allies in London, in particular the Stop the War Coalition and Friends of Al Aqsa protest about, however they want to spin their aggression. Oh and they want to Zarah Sultana MP for Coventry South spoke; Jeremy Corbyn and the General Secretary of the National Education Union were expected but I have no confirmation that they actually turned up. I would imagine that the GS of the main teaching union has a lot to occupy him at the moment. A teacher from Batley in hiding, fearful for his livf for teaching Civics and RE. Others in Batley and Sheffield facing calls for their sacking for the same thing. Most of our children having lost a year's schooling, facing a second year of assessments by their teachers rather than a public exam. There's a lot more for him to worry about than a sheik in Jerusalem.

A banner of peace was rolled out.

It was met with verbal abuse, then the pen was surrounded and the missiles started

See left, such a missile. Looks to me like a piece of builder's rubble.

Cliff then posted a video which I cannot embed, but the event in Blackburn also attracted the tender care of the local MP. I have just spoken to Cliff; he continues to praise the police for their handling of one of the most aggressive mobs he has ever encountered. He will be writing more tomorrow.

Update – Jeremy Corbyn was present and spoke. The Daily Mail has pictures (two left) of the
