

Protecting property from vandalism is racist, per NY Times

by Lev Tsitrin

One cannot help but be astonished that “\(as I explained elsewhere\)”, they make a fascinating contribution to legal theory of the First amendment, seeing vandalism as legitimate expression of indignation. To many of us – I daresay all of us – this is indeed news, even more shocking given that the New York Times’ editors decided that it is covered by the paper’s logo, “all the news that’s fit to print.” Perhaps the real news to be derived from publication of this op-ed is that the New York Times keeps going from bad to worse – in shilling for illegality, it reached the new level of depth in its precipitous fall from measured respectability which once upon a time defined it.