An Islamist cleric who said critics of the Prophet Mohammed should have their heads “chopped off” has been allowed into the UK to speak at an event.

Sick Enayet Ullah Abbasi previously slammed the late Queen Elizabeth II for endorsing a school that turned children into “disgusting human beings” In (a) rant, he blasted Queen Elizabeth II for her Queen’s Young Leaders Programme which praised teacher Ayman Sadiq who founded Bangladeshi online learning platform 10 Minute School. Abbasi said: “The young children are being taught living together, free sex, intermingling in sexes, homosexuality and nasty concepts of sexual relations with transgenders in the name of education. They are being transformed into disgusting human beings with inferior characteristics, all in the name of the education system. I was saying now it is crystal clear what the Queen of Britain is doing in the name of helping people.”

He also praised the terrorists who carried out the 9/11 attacks in America calling them “brave lions”. Can we get a collection up to get him some new teeth? above left.

The hate cleric has also delivered hateful speeches against Ahmadi Muslims, a persecuted minority of the Islamic faith, urging his followers to kill them.

Wasiq Wasiq, Associate Research Fellow at the Henry Jackson Society, told GB News: "Enayetullah Abbasi is alleged to have used rhetoric that is inciting hatred against Hindus and minority Muslim sects. The fact that he has been allowed to enter the UK and speak freely demonstrates a weakness in our ability to properly vet hateful preachers. He should be on the first plane back to Bangladesh and handed to the authorities there."

The Bangladeshi scholar was due to speak in Birmingham this evening at the Islamic Conference 2023 which is being hosted and organised by TV channel ION TV.

He is also set to appear in London on Wednesday.

GB News contacted a reporter at iON TV, who rejected this broadcaster's claims that Abbasi was delivering hateful and extreme rhetoric.

John Spellar, Labour MP for Warley, told GB News: "Given his record, how the hell was he allowed to come into the country? If we are clear that he has made these statements, what the hell were the Home Office thinking? Clearly they have questions to answer."

I can't see where in London he is expected to speak.

I believe his talk in Edinburgh was cancelled three days ago.

On Sunday 25th he is expected to be at the Leicester Darus Salam Masjid. Everyone (brothers) is welcome to attend; sisters must listen on a dedicated radio channel. That would not be permitted in any other circumstances.

The following day (Monday 25th) he is expected at the Crescent Hall in Luton, with a programme for both male and female 'members'.
