

Report: End 'demonization' of female genital mutilation

From the CBC Canada and interview in Canada

...Your paper says that banning most minor forms is culturally insensitive supremacist and discriminatory toward women, how so?

DR. ALLAN JACOBS: It's culturally insensitive in that if these things are important to people then we're telling them that they're wrong, that they're a criminal. . . if the culture is strange, if the culture is more exotic, if the culture is perhaps one that a lot of people don't like, than even the most minor procedures such as the vulvar nick, are criminal and that sounds discriminatory.

A focus on stopping those who perform it, rather than coming up with alternative means of cutting girls' genitals, would be a real solution.
