

Ryan's Dilemma

Paul Ryan really wishes Donald Trump weren't the Republican nominee for President. He really wishes Donald Trump hadn't proposed such wild and crazy ideas like not letting people come into the country who may not have our country's best interest at heart, or insisting that we have control over our borders, or that we should seek stability in the Middle East and avoid falling into a new Cold War with Russia. Especially radical is the idea that an American President should put the interests of the American worker above that of global corporations or workers in foreign nations.

Gosh, I just don't know how Paul Ryan can possibly support that. Trump is much too radical.