

Sikh Awareness Society volunteers also asked to leave Crown Court Leeds

Sikh girls and women suffered abuse by Islamic men for centuries before it came to British working class towns. The Sikh Awareness Society has been working to help abused girls and their families and to raise public awareness since 1998. And most of them are not cowed by fear of racism.

A senior leader, Mr Mohan Singh was with a small team of volunteers at the Crown Court in Leeds on Friday, expecting to observe from the public gallery the return of the jury and delivery of verdicts in a certain case.
