

Something springlike

Signs that spring is on its way. Snowdrops in the garden of an old English country house yesterday.

The definition of the flowers isn't the best, but what caught my eye about this particular clump was the plant next to it, the black grass, or mondo grass or ophiopogon (whatever one prefers to call it) growing so close to the snowdrops that it almost looks like a black plant with white flowers. My camera focused more on the black leaves than the white flowers. I thought it quite striking.

