Tuesday evening in Washington, DC, we had more evidence of the Administration's policy of appeasing Muslim Brotherhood opponents of the Al-Sisi government in Cairo, the latter seeking to reform radical Islamic doctrine espousing Salafist Jihad. Adam Kredo of the Washington Free Beacon reported this latest example of outreach to Radical Islamist groups in the Ummah, "Muslim Brotherhood-Aligned Leaders Hosted at State Department:"

One member of the delegation, a Brotherhood-aligned judge in Egypt, reported to have close ties to the Brotherhood.

The delegation also includes Abdel Mawgoud al-Dardery, a Brotherhood member who served as a parliamentarian from Luxor.

Sharaby, the Brotherhood-aligned judge, flashed the Islamist group's popular symbol in his picture at the State Department and wrote in a caption: "Now in the U.S. State Department. Your steadfastness impresses everyone," according to an independent translation of the Arabic.

Another member of the delegation, Maha Azzam, confirmed during an event hosted Tuesday by the Center for the Study of Islam and Democracy (CSID)—another group Maha Azzam confirms that 'anti-coup' delegation, which includes 2 top [Muslim Brothers], had 'fruitful' conversations at State Dept," Egypt expert Eric Trager
