The stated aims of the rally – organised in response to the terrible news of the ritualised Muslim murder by beheading of Coptic Christians in Libya, carried out by Muslims affiliated with ‘Islamic State’ – are “To honour our Christian martyrs; to show support for the victims’ families and share in their grief;” and to “call on the Australian government and the international community to fight the threat of ISIS.”

Readers here who are Australian and who reside in Sydney or within feasible travelling distance are strongly encouraged to attend this rally in order to publicly and en masse declare solidarity with the victims of Jihad. It doesn’t matter whether you are Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or atheist; go, because this is an opportunity to stand up right in the middle of Australia’s biggest city – in the very location, Martin Place, where a murderous Muslim last December attacked and took hostage a cafe full of people and ritually murdered one of his captives, while another captive died from rebounding “friendly fire” as police ended the siege – and condemn and resist the mass-murderous Jihad that is waged by the Mohammedan Mob against *all* who refuse to Submit.
