

The West Responds to the Russian Aggression

by Michael Curtis

And hear poor rogues tell of court news, who loses, who wins, who's in, who's out, and take upon's the mystery of things.

On April 28. 2022 a meeting, symbolically as well as politically meaningful, took place at the former site of Auschwitz. The President of Poland, Andrzej Duda, right wing politician, joined in the March of the Living with Holocaust survivors and 2000 others at a ceremony on Israel's National Holocaust Memorial Day, and laid a wreath at the Death Wall in Auschwitz. He commented on the parallel with present day events. Just as Adolf Hitler was acting to wipe out all Jews, as well as many Poles and Roma, so the war criminal Vladimir Putin is trying to kill and eliminate the Ukrainian people. The Russian forces were committing genocide in Ukraine.

The meeting reinforces the present formidable role of Poland in the face of the Russian unprovoked aggression against Ukraine. It is surprising for at least three reasons. As recently as 2018 a Polish law was passed making it illegal to accuse the Polish nation of complicity in the Holocaust and other Nazi German atrocities. The evidence is mixed. Though some acts of violence were committed by Poles against Jews during World War II, and antisemitism was widespread in the population, there was no significant anti-Jewish mass movement engaged in killings or responsible for the Holocaust.

A second surprise is that Poland which, in May 2021, was reprimanded by the European Court of Justice for judicial changes that were in breach of European law, should now be playing an important and forthright, if not the leading, role among Europeans in opposing Russian brutal aggression. Poland can rightfully be called a key player in the struggle to free Europe from Putin's objectives for two reasons. It has been the European country continuing to supply Ukraine with key military support, estimated at 1.6 billion. Included are weapons such as anti-tank, 200 Soviet designed and upgraded T-72 tanks, several hundred infantry fighting vehicles, self-propelled howitzers, multiple rocket launchers, portable anti-aircraft missiles, and Warmate drones., comparable to U.S. Switchblade drones.

The Polish assistance is surprising for a third reason. Poles and Ukrainians fought during World War II over the disputed territory of Volhynia, an area that has changed hands many times in history. During that fighting, Poles were massacred by the Ukrainian Insurgent Army, an event now proclaimed by the Polish parliament as a Genocide.

Poland offered to supply Ukraine with all of its MiG-29 jet war planes which it would deploy to Ramstein air base in Germany from where the U.S. could pass them on to Kyiv but which the Biden administration refused this proposal. Poland has campaigned for stronger sanctions against Russia, as well as for more humanitarian and military aid for Ukraine. It has been the recipient of the largest number of Ukrainian refugees, so far 2.9 million, more than 60% of the total exodus.

In his visit to Warsaw on March 10, 2022, former Vice President Pence pointed out that Poland is one of only seven NATO countries to meet its obligation to spend two per cent of its GDP on defenses.

The role of Poland has been understood by Putin who on April 27, 2022, announced he was cutting off gas supplies to Poland and to Bulgaria. Yet Poland is only one of the U.S, and European allies who have been providing military aid to Ukraine. The largest contributor is the U.S. which has provided more than $4 billion in security assistance. The list of supplies includes helicopters, 1,400 Stinger anti-aircraft systems, 5,500 Javelin missile launchers, howitzers, armored vehicles, and tactical drones.

The head of NATO, Jens Stoltenberg, has spoken of the role played by the NATO countries and their supplies of at least $ 8 billion worth of military support. The EU has promised a 500 million euro package to fund weapons. That support has been increasing, partly as result of advocacy of President Zelensky for more help, and partly as the Western countries, after a limited cautious start, are affected by videos of the reality of the mass killing and atrocities against civilians, and the shelling of residential areas by the Russians.

Presently, 40 nations are sending military equipment to Ukraine, but ensuring that there is no escalation beyond the borders of Ukraine, and therefore rejected imposing a no-fly zone over Ukraine. Briefly, Britain has sent large supplies, including more than 5,000 anti-tank missiles, five anti-defense systems with more than 100 missiles, Sky Sabre long range air defense system, plastic explosives, Starstreak anti-aircraft missiles, anti-ship missile systems, precision munitions, armored vehicles, and non-lethal equipment such as ration packs, medical equipment, helmets, and boots. Britain is also promising more supplicated armor vehicles, the Stormer kind, and longer-range Brimstone missiles. Foreign secretary Liz Truss declared, "we will keep going further and faster to push Russia out of the whole of Ukraine."

In France, President Emmanuel Macron, who earlier thought a cordial arrangement could be made with the Kremlin and was preoccupied with electoral campaigning for a second term of office, has promised more aid, including truck mounted Caesar cannons and anti-tank missiles in addition to military equipment already sent. Czechoslovakia and Slovenia are supplying Ukraine with Soviet designed weapons, T-72 tanks, and S-300 air defense missiles.

Most disappointing has been Germany, whose ties to the Kremlin go back to Rapallo in 1922 and the Brest-Litovsk agreement on trade between Walter Rathenau, German Jewish foreign minister and electrical magnate, later assassinated by antisemitic terrorists, and the Soviet Union. The ties may be said to back even further with the memory of the poor German princess who became Catherine the Great, and who invited Germans to become Russian citizens and farm land in Russia, while maintaining their language and culture.

It is still unclear who is the real Olaf Scholz, the German Chancellor, the master of policy u-turns. He has been hesitant in decision making over Ukraine. He was, he said, driven not by fear, but by "political responsibility," avoiding escalation that could lead to a third world war.

Scholz at first banned sending weapons to Ukraine in contrast to the rest of NATO countries, and blocked Estonia from sending Soviet designed howitzers raising the general question of how reliable is Germany as an ally in NATO. Instead, Germany sent 5,000 helmets.

Yet, one week after Scholz said Germany would send weapons but not heavy weapons, and foreign minister Annalena Baerbock declared that Germany's armed services can no longer supply weapon from its own reserves, Scholz agreed to send heavy weapons, Gepard anti-aircraft guns, tanks. Scholz did back an EU embargo on Russian coal but continues to block EU sanctions on Russian gas exports, on the grounds that Germany does not have alternative energy supplies.

On February 27, 2022, Scholz had announced a Zeitenwende, watershed, in German foreign policy, to invest more in defense, to impose financial sanctions on Russia, and later to send heavy weapons.

It is perhaps too strong to suggest that Germany is politically hostage to Russia, but it is dependent on Russian natural gas at a time when it is closing its nuclear power plants, and phasing out coal.

It has helped the operation of Nord Stream 1 , and preparing for Nord Stream 2. Germany is dependent on Russia for 55% of its gas.

In addition, there are many German firms doing business in Russian, personal links, and historic memories. Nazi Germany captured Ukraine and part of the Soviet Union, and killed millions, and present-day Germany is reluctant to intervene in that territory. One controversial figure is former German Chancellor Gerhard Schröder who is personally friendly with Putin, and who in 2005 became head of the shareholder committee of Nord Stream AG and president of the board of directors at Nord Stream 2 AG, and since 2017 on the board of Rosneft, Russian state energy company. He has profited very well by these energy interests.

For the West, economic and logistical issues may handicap the aid to Ukraine. The energy problem exists with its dependence on Russian gas: for North Macedonia , Bosnia and Moldova it is 100 %, for Finland and Latvia in mid 90s, for Italy 46 %, and France 24 %. The Russian aggression and threat to Western interests raises the problem for advocates for action on climate change and others, of the need for more investment in fossil fuels for reasons of security.

There is the problem of supply chains which relate to the large number of products made by Ukraine and Russia, 26 % of world's exports of wheat, 16 % of corn, 10 % of barley, 80 % of sunflower oil and seed, and neon, used for microchips. And Russia is still the world's third largest oil producer, second largest producer of gas, top exporter of nickel and palladium.

Nevertheless, the Russian aggression has led to changes in preeminence of Western countries and changes in policies in reactions against Ukraine. Putin could not have expected the strong role of Poland or the bid of Sweden and Finland to become members of NATO.
