

To us Londoners it is still raw

No more needs to be said.

It turns out that something does need to be said, although I know that most of our US readers recall the events of 7th July 2005 in London, as most UK readers recall those in New York and Washington on 9th September 2001.

For Lou the cheap beer sommelier, to recap.

On Thursday 7th July 2007 four Muslim men committed jihad on the London transport system by detonating suicide bombs almost simultaneously at four locations. On a Circle Line train underground between Liverpool Street station and Aldgate station, at another part of the Circle line nearest Edgware Road Station and on the Piccadilly Line nearest Kings Cross station. The 4th bomber, for reasons never fully understood, detonated his bomb on a No 30 bus at Tavistock Square. Tavistock Square is where
