

Tommy Robinson speaks at Speaker's Corner, Hyde Park, London

To London on a cold (0°C, snow, yes not as cold as Manitoba but parky for SE England) to see or hear Tommy Robinson at intended to give last week, but he was forbidden entry to the UK. Lutz Bachmann, the founder of Pegida also hoped to attend from

Dresden, but he was turned back at Stansted Airport in Essex this morning. According to here.

The speech completed there were cheers and Tommy and his party and supporters processed away. While we were watching this had quietly set up behind us. Two Muslims who are frequently at Speakers Corner, who go by the names Mohammed Hijab and Ali Dawah, had been vocal during the week about what and how Tommy would be defeated.

I don't think this dawa merchant is either of them. However he was soon surrounded by a knowledgeable group before whom he was floundering in his efforts to explain what a proper paedophile is, and how his prophet Mohammed was not one such.

As a young woman I was talking to, who had travelled from Hertfordshire north of London, said "It doesn't matter that we didn't actually see Tommy (bless him) what mattered was to be here to show how many we are."

Today was a good show.
