

Why Is Farhad Khorasani Not Disbarred?

by Hugh Fitzgerald

Farhad Khorasani is an Iranian-American who appears to have had two distinct careers. What he did for the first 27 years of his life is not known, but in 2014 he began to act in “Tehrangeles,” described as “a television series Persian-American buddy cops TV show.” It’s unclear how long he was on it; he describes himself as having been “a “stunt man, actor, producer, writer, stunt coordinator.” How long he continued as a jack-of-all-trades on the show, and how long the show itself lasted, is unknown. But apparently it wasn’t all smooth going, for he decided to change careers and become a lawyer. He was admitted to the California bar on December 2, 2019, so he’s been a lawyer for little more than a year. In that time, business appears to have been scanty; his one-man law firm remains a one-man law firm, catering to fellow Iranian-Americans, with its focus on immigration law and on what Khorasani describes, a bit too grandly, for the phrase evokes images of white-shoe firms with branches in New York, Paris and London, not as a one-man operation off a boulevard in Los Angeles, as “international law.”

He has had only one “customer review” as a lawyer. To wit:

Terrible lawyer just in it for the money.

Lawyers like Farhad give all lawyers a bad name. Over promises under delivers and extremely rude! Dishonest is an understatement.

Sounds as if he may be off to a bad start.

But that’s not the worst of it. For Farhad Khorasani has a fixation on Jews, one that he has decided to share, via Twitter, with the world.

Here are some of those tweets:

On Jan. 9 he praised a women, Congresswoman Mary Miller, an Illinois Republican, who had been in the news for declaring that “Hitler was right.” She was not speaking about his murderous antisemitism; the full quote is this: “Hitler was right on one thing: He said, ‘Whoever has the youth, has the future.’” Still to be deplored, but not a real endorsement of Hitler. Khorasani, however, tried to deflect criticism:

WHY AM I RECEIVING ANTI-SEMITIC MESSAGES NOW? QUESTIONING ME, A JEW, EQUALS HOLOCAUST DENIAL. IF YOU ARE CRITISIZING ME, & TRYING TO SAY JEWS (LIKE ME) ARE LIERS & MUST BE DOUBTED YOU ARE FOLLOWING AN ANTI SEMITIC TROPE SIMILAR TO GOBBLES & HITLER. #3%ASHKENEZIJEW

This was his first thoroughly muddled attempt to pretend that the antisemitic tweets he posted were in fact from others;

they were being sent to him – a “Jew” himself, because, he bizarrely claimed, he was “3% Ashkenazi Jew.” And why, oh why, he wondered was this happening?

It fooled no one. And he began to worry even more about mention of disbarment. So on January 28, he tried again, insisting that others, not he, had been responsible for the offensive tweets about Jews, 9/11, and how the world needed a “new Hitler.” These people pretending to be Farhad Khorasani were hackers trying to get him in trouble.
